90/13R #162	A 2	On the trip down the Yukon River from Dawson City, Mr. Ladd served as a deck[hand?] on board the "F.K. Austin." They served a four hour watch and then were off eight hours. The principle duty during the trip was to see that the sparks from the ships funnel did not cause fires. However, they were call[ed] out at numerous times to help load on 30 to 40 cords of wood at a number of stops. Mr. Ladd mentions the beautiful scenery they passed through and that he made a number of views including pictures of Indian settlements.

Much back packing was done in 1898 but the first of it was over the treterous, snowy and muddy White Pass trail and later packing from the Yukon river to their No. 16 home on Thistle creek. Mr. Ladd Oct. 17, 1898 reported that the trail was terrible. - 1899?.

90/13R #186	A 1	Mine on Thistle Creek with ladder. Shows Frost. This mine shows the frost in the frozen ground. Each night a wood fire was started and the following morning the six to 12 inches of thawed "paydirt" was mucked out and windlassed to the surface, where the dirt was stocked piled until spring. When spring thawed the creek the dirt was sluiced. During January-March 1900, Mr. Ladd and his partners set up a rocker in a heated tent, and recovered available gold each day. With the temperature a minus 40 degrees, Mr. Ladd's diary entry for Feb. 16, 1900 reads: "Laid and lit drift in 16. then went to 17 and got rocker ready. Had 15 buckets today and got $6.10. Two nuggets today $1.60 and $1.00. After dinner rockered out dirt from 16. Four buckets yielded 50c. Jake and I sawed out load of wood. Earle made bread today."
