Kate Harris is the winner of the 2019 RBC Taylor Prize for her travel memoir Lands of Lost Borders. The $30,000 prize annually recognizes the best in Canadian literary nonfiction.

In Lands of Lost Borders, Harris recounts her 10,000 kilometre cycling trip along the Silk Road, crossing into 10 countries — including Turkey, Kyrgyzstan and Tibet — with her friend Mel Yule. Along the 10-month journey, Harris explores the political, cultural and environmental history of the places and people she encounters.

Harris grew up in Ontario and currently lives off-grid on the border of B.C. and the Yukon.

“Winter Storm”

No one will ever forget the Winter Storm that roared into town before dawn that morning. The hard driven sleet coming down like crashing waves caused concern, but it was the fierceness of the wind raging as a force to be reckoned with that caused alarm.

Windows were at risk of being smashed to pieces at any moment. Doors rattled so loudly they gave the feeling nothing could prevent them from being blown open. People huddled inside in fear and yet, made special efforts to comfort their children and pets.

In fact, every building giving shelter did not bestow confidence that they would remain standing much longer.

And then, soon after dawn the storm swept past on its way north.

The drama was over. A hush settled on the town and its residents felt relieved enough to breathe normally again. By some miracle, no lives were lost and no one was hurt. Slowly, people came outside, nodded to their neighbors and each in his own way spoke a prayer of gratitude.
